Foreign buyer for Nortel OK, Clement says

INDUSTRY A foreign buyer is welcome to bid on Nortel Networks Corp. as long as any such offer passes national security tests and is of net benefit to Canada, Industry Minister Tony Clement said yesterday.

"If a foreign company, for instance, wishes to purchase all or part of Nortel, then there is a review process through Investment Canada which I certainly cannot prejudice," Clement said.

"The law states that if there's an issue of national security, then government does have the right to review it on that basis. On other bases, obviously there is a net-benefit-to-Canada test that kicks in at a certain level," he said.

Clement said having a foreign company buy Nortel could be the best way "to preserve jobs." REUTERS

Second fire at high school

TRACEY TONG
tracey.tong@metronews.ca

DAMAGE For the second time this year, Ottawa firefighters are investigating a fire at a classroom portable at South Carleton High School.

At 3:22 a.m., Ottawa firefighters received a report of a fire at South Carleton High School, said Ottawa fire platoon Chief Dave Stephenson.

The fire at 3673 McBean St. in Richmond "completely destroyed" one portable and damaged two others which were located behind the main school building, said Stephenson.

The fire, which was attended by 35 firefighters with 11 apparatus, was under control by 4:16 a.m.

There were no injuries to civilians or firefighters, but the fire caused $300,000 in damage to structures and $50,000 to the contents.

"It was a big fire," said Stephenson.

The fire department and police are now investigating where and how the fire started.

This is the second fire involving portables at the school this year, said Stephenson. Firefighters attended an early morning fire at South Carleton in late February.

Firefighters aren't commenting on whether this incident is considered suspicious.

Kilrea tale doubted

O'Brien's lawyer calls ex-mayoral candidate a complainer

TIM WIECLAWSKI
tim.wieclawski@metronews.ca

With less than $5,000 remaining for his mayoral campaign fund by mid-August 2006, Terry Kilrea signed the lease for his campaign office on Richmond Road, then promptly decided to drop out of the race, a court heard yesterday.

A full day of cross-examination from Mayor Larry O'Brien's defence attorney Michael Edelson ended with him wondering why Kilrea would rent the office when he knew there wasn't enough money to continue the campaign for 3½ more months.

According to Kilrea's testimony, he would have

"There was no action taken against me. Therefore I don't feel anything was done incorrectly."

Terry Kilrea

signed the lease one week after he rejected an alleged offer from O'Brien for an appointment to the National Parole Board in exchange for dropping out of the race and endorsing O'Brien.

Instead, by September 2006, Kilrea had registered to run in Bay Ward and threw his support behind Bob Chiarelli, who Kilrea lost to in the 2003 election.

Edelson accused Kilrea of "perpetually complaining about the conduct of other candidates," during both the 2003 and 2006 elections, while personally displaying little regard for the Elections Act.

On the last day of the 2003 election, Kilrea registered a complaint against Chiarelli, accusing him of posting signs too close to polling stations.

In 2006, Kilrea twice lodged official complaints against Alex Cullen, alleging he used city resources for his re-election campaign. Cullen also lodged a complaint against Kilrea, claiming he raised funds and spent outside the legal time frame for municipal campaigns.

The Municipal Elections Act would have prohibited Kilrea from soliciting or spending campaign funds prior to January 2006. Edelson brought up a number of occasions when Kilrea would have at least spent some money on things like campaign business cards and maintaining a website.

Kilrea insisted he did no wrong.

"There was no action taken against me. Therefore I don't feel anything was done incorrectly," he said.

The day started with Edelson questioning Kilrea on the date of the initial meeting between the two of them. In Kilrea's December 2006 affidavit, he said the meeting was on July 5. In March 2009, he revised the date to July 12 when he met with the Crown prosecutor.

Kilrea takes the witness chair for a third day today.

'No more sprawl,' protesters urge

tracy.tong@metronews.ca

Dozens of city residents who want to see Ottawa grow sustainably — not in size — gathered at the Human Rights Monument yesterday for an upbeat rally.

Holding signs that read, "Hold the Line" and "No more sprawl," residents gathered to hear experts cite reasons against expanding the city's urban boundary, including increased cost to provide services across a wider area, difficulty in providing social, medical and city services and having residents choose cars over transit.

"We're not against growth," said rally organizer Will Murray. "We're not against the suburbs and we're not against developers."

The group was there to urge council to grow the capital in a responsible manner.

City staff has proposed adding 850 hectares to the city's urban boundary, and members of the Coalition for a Sustainable Ottawa, along with other groups, are asking council to hold the line on the urban boundary, said Murray.

Glebe Community Association president Bob Brocklebank said expanding the urban boundary will decrease efficiency — and increase costs — for all taxpayers.

"By running the sewer and water lines to the suburbs, we are paying more and more," he said. "Spreading it out will be less efficient."

Sprawl also has a negative effect on health and the environment, said Stephen Hazell, head of the Sierra Club of Canada.

"Last year, 21,000 Canadians died as a result of pollution," said Hazell.

Sprawl also makes it difficult for newcomers to access services, said Ottawa resident Haiyan Zhang.

"(Immigrants) need to be connected," she said. "They need to go to community centres and libraries."

When existing infrastructure is in decline, it doesn't make sense to expand more, said urban planner Phil Brown.

Half a dozen councillors were also there in support.

"This is not about holding the line," said Coun. Clive Doucet. "This is about having a line."

Large, single-family homes are not sustainable, said Coun. Diane Holmes.

"Urban sprawl will be the death of our planet," said Coun. Alex Cullen. "We have to show that we can live as a community. Folks, let's hold the line, let's stop urban sprawl."

The Boreal forest is the breeding and nesting ground for billions of migratory birds. But each year, the forest is destroyed by unchecked oil and gas, mining, logging and hydro development. Petitioners ask that the government adopt the principles of the Boreal Forest Conservation Framework.

IBD foundation raises call for awareness

HEALTH Ottawa resident Sherry Pang has been living with Crohn's disease for almost 30 years.

She believes the lack of public awareness of the disease has to do with the large social stigma around it.

"There is a lot of discrimination associated with having a bowel disease that really has a lot to do with lack of understanding," said Pang.

Diagnosed with Crohn's at 18, Pang said it took her many years to accept and eventually talk about her disease.

"People don't really talk about it — it's not exactly popular dinner conversation," she said.

More online

- People can sign the declaration at isupportIBD.ca.

A board member of the Crohn's and Colitis Foundation of Canada in Ottawa, Pang hopes an online declaration launched by the foundation yesterday will help improve the quality of life for those living with Inflammatory Bowel Disease (IBD).

The Crohn's and Colitis Declaration is a call to action for Canadians to recognize the needs of those with IBD and to show their support for the cause.

Pang said she hopes, with the expansion of the foundation's resources, people being diagnosed with IBD in the future will have an easier time talking about it.

"I think if you were to talk to anybody with IBD, besides wanting a cure, they would most want there to be a greater understanding of the disease," she said.

Over 200,000 Canadians are living with Crohn's disease and ulcerative colitis. Canada has among the highest prevalence and incidence rates of IBD in the world, with 9,200 new cases reported every year, the foundation said.

Private profits, public pockets

Taxes overpaid to collect cash: Report

Some of Canada's largest corporations may be using the government as a high-yield investment account by deliberately overpaying on their annual tax returns to collect favourable interest rates, the federal auditor general says.

In each of the last three years, top businesses have realized a $30-million windfall by paying a total of $4 billion into accounts managed by the Canada Revenue Agency that cover them in the event their tax returns are reassessed.

The accounts have paid an interest rate of between five and seven per cent since 2006. The rate is considerably more favourable than that offered by the banks.

Auditor general Sheila Fraser said it appears corporations were well aware of the favourable treatment they were getting with their federal accounts, though it is difficult to prove any company has set out to bill taxpayers.

"No one asked the corporations or tried to determine what the motivation was, but I think we can probably arrive at that conclusion," she told reporters. "The agency did try to return the money to them and they declined."

Fraser even joked that there could be an influx of chief financial officers looking to stash money in Ottawa in the wake of her report. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Canadians: We play well with others

TheWestView

Paul Sullivan

metronews.ca/thewestview

In Canada, it's easy to walk on the SunnySide of the street. I say this with confidence even though I've spent many of the last three decades doing what we in the media do best — panic-mongering.

That's why we're journalists; we're jacked up by 200-point bold bad news headlines, the badder the better. When editors get together at the end of the year and pick the top story, it's always some disaster, never a good news story. Good news is a cute puppy that goes at the end of a newscast or on page 27, a grudging change of pace from your hard-bitten friends in the news.

Anyway, it's easy to get high on Canada because ... well, just look around you. This is the freaking second biggest country in the world. How often do we even think about that? If you live in Vancouver, the world ends in Chilliwack, after that, there are mountains, and way, way farther away, Toronto. Scary. And if you live in Toronto, you can't venture west of Mississauga without suffering a nosebleed.

If you live in Montreal, you refuse to recognize the legitimacy of Vancouver and Toronto altogether as you sit in a café on Rue St-Denis, Centre of the Universe. Maybe it's just too big and beautiful to get your head around it, never mind your arms.

SunnySide

The rest of the world doesn't seem to have that problem.

Once again, we're in the top five of the 215 nations tracked in Mercer Consulting's annual Quality of Living Survey; our American cousins barely crack the top 30 and that's because San Francisco and Honolulu skew the results. Another ranks us among the top 10 nations in the world for happiness, along with traditional warm puppies Denmark and Switzerland.

And if you're not tired of surveys yet, how about this one? While the rest of the world is in the economic tank, the Economic Intelligence Unit's global business survey for 2009-13 ranks Canada first in the G7 as "the best place to invest and do business."

Who knew? The very best thing about Canada is the thing that infuriates many, but makes us the hope of civilization — it's called multiculturalism, which means whoever you are, wherever you're from, you check your guns at the door, and if you want to live here, you learn to play well with others.

On this sunny day, let's give the last word to an American, one of our biggest fans: Bill Clinton.

"In a world darkened by ethnic conflicts that tear nations apart, Canada stands as a model of how people of different cultures can live and work together in peace, prosperity, and mutual respect."

Consumer bankruptcies up

Bankruptcies in Canada soared by more than 50 per cent in March from a year ago as the rising unemployment rate left more consumers unable to pay their bills.

At the same time, business bankruptcies declined during the month, according to figures released yesterday by the Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy Canada.

There were 10,578 personal bankruptcies across the country in March, up 17.3 per cent from the month before, and up a staggering 57 per cent from March 2008.

The biggest year-over-year increases came from the western provinces. The number of personal bankruptcies in Alberta nearly doubled to 951 in March; in British Columbia it rose 78.4 per cent to 960.

The increase coincided with a rise in unemployment. In March the jobless rate rose to eight per cent, its highest level in seven years. Even though the economy added 36,000 net new jobs in April, the rate did not change.

On the business side, there were 507 bankruptcies in March, up 6.7 per cent from February, but a decline of 10.3 per cent from March 2008.

Overall, there were 11,085 personal and business bankruptcies in March, up 16.7 per cent from the month before, and an increase of 51.8 per cent from March 2008.

Low energy imports boost trade surplus

REPORT Substantially lower energy imports helped hike Canada's trade surplus in March to $1.11 billion, more than double analysts' expectations, from $262 million in February. Statistics Canada said yesterday that energy imports had fallen by 18.4 per cent during the month, most of it in volume terms and concentrated in aviation fuel. Energy exports, mostly to the United States, fell by only 1.4 per cent.

The overall surplus rose because imports fell by more — 4.4 per cent — than the 1.8 per cent decline in exports. Canada exported $32.50 billion and imported $31.40 billion.

Honesty key in dismissal hearings

WorkplaceLaw

Daniel Lublin

Metronews.ca/workplacelaw

"Every man has his fault, and honesty is his."

—WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

In the often twisted world of Canadian workplace law, both employers and employees tend to exaggerate facts in an effort to improve their own cases. Whether it's a deliberate strategy or a simple white lie, our courts are increasingly signalling their disdain when stories without the conviction of truth find their way to trial. A recent decision from British Columbia reminds us all that honesty remains the best policy.

About halfway through his apprenticeship as a repairman at Dams Ford Lincoln Sales Ltd. in Surrey, B.C., Tyler Marchen was given an envelope with two weeks' pay and his record of employment stating that he had been dismissed, and told to leave. When he asked why he was being fired, he was told that it was not up for discussion and that he was no longer welcome on the property.

After Marchen's dismissal, Dams made several comments suggesting that he was fired due to a police matter. Although Marchen was viewed as a good employee, his brother (who was also an employee at Dams) had been implicated in some thefts from the dealership. When a government employee called to request the reasons for Marchen's dismissal in order to qualify him for employment insurance, she was told it was due to a police issue and they couldn't risk keeping him on.

As Marchen and Dams had a fixed-term agreement for the duration of his apprenticeship, Marchen promptly sued Dams, claiming that he was entitled to the value of the remaining term of the contract. As soon as Marchen started his legal action, Dams changed its story. It called the employment insurance office and told it that, despite an investigation into Marchen's brother, it had actually fired Marchen because it had downsized its body shop.

At trial, Dams' witnesses denied that Marchen was fired because of his brother's potential theft but maintained its story that there had simply been a lack of work. Judge Richard Goepel wasn't convinced. He found that Marchen was dismissed because of Dams' unfounded suspicion that he was involved in his brother's potential theft and that it had deliberately attempted to mislead the court as to its true motives.

Dams' decision to mislead the court turned a routine case for wrongful dismissal into a legal nightmare. Marchen was awarded over $18,000 in lost wages, $25,000 for loss of training, $100,000 in punitive damages and most of his legal fees.

If a company is not honest when it gives a reason for the dismissal of an employee, the company stands to lose a lot.

The world's most wonderful film set

Angels & Demons joins the many films that use Rome as a backdrop

RICHARD CROUSE
for Metro Canada

From Anita Ekberg and Marcello Mastroianni splashing around in the waters of the Trevi Fountain in La Dolce Vita to Audrey Hepburn and Gregory Peck's romantic street tour in Roman Holiday the Eternal City has provided some of the cinema's most unforgettable images.

According to Italian director Federico Fellini, "Rome is the most wonderful movie set in the world." Now with the release of Angels & Demons, shot on location in Rome, a new industry has emerged from the ancient city — movie tourism.

Patrizia Prestipino, head of Rome's provincial department of tourism told the New York Times that "a film like this could re-launch American tourism. For us it's like free advertising." And it's marketing that seems to be working. Tour groups like the Angels & Demons Path of Illumination Tour, angelsanddemons.it, Sienna Reid's Angels and Demons Tour, italyhotline.com, and the Rome Angels and Demons Half-Day Tour, viatour.com, have been enjoying brisk business with packages that range from $75 per person to $550 for a personal excursion.

If you're not a tour group kind of person you can arrange your own expedition of Rome's Angels and Demons locations and other cinematic sites with a good map from your hotel's concierge.

(Take note that several of the places mentioned in the book are not geographically accurate. It's best to do some internet research before hitting the streets.)

Ron Howard, director of Angels & Demons, in Rome's Piazza del Popolo.

Here are some good starting points:

Castel Sant'Angelo

Built between 135 and 139 by the Roman Emperor Hadrian Castel Sant'Angelo not only figures in the climax of Angels & Demons, but also has a spectacular panoramic view of Rome. The castle can also be seen in Roman Holiday's barge scene.

Santa Maria della Vittoria

Santa Maria Della Vittoria is the setting for Angels & Demons' most gruesome and exciting scene — the "fire" killing — but in reality is the home to the beautiful Bernini sculpture of the ecstasy of St. Theresa.

Fontana dei Quattro Fiumi

Located at the center of Piazza Navona the ornate The Fontana dei Quattro Fiumi ("Fountain of the Four Rivers") is one of Bernini's most famous works and the backdrop for the film's "water" assassination.

Other Rome movie must-sees include:

Mouth of Truth

The Mouth of Truth located in the portico of the church of Santa Maria in Cosmedin. The carved, grinning stone face which purportedly bites off the hands of liars most famously appeared in Roman Holiday but can also be seen in Only You starring Robert Downey Jr.

Trevi Fountain

At almost 26 metres high the Trevi Fountain is the largest Baroque fountain in Rome and the inspiration for the 1954 hit song and movie Three Coins in the Fountain. Every day tourists throw almost 3,300 euros into the fountain — legend says that visitors who toss a coin into the fountain are guaranteed a return to Rome — money that is donated to charity.

Movie lovers will find much to see in Rome and many memories to take home. As Audrey Hepburn said in Roman Holiday, "I will cherish my visit here in memory for as long as I live."

8 p.m. Having checked into your hotel, head for great food and a real Italian vibe at the Antica Enoteca on Via della Croce between Via del Corso and Piazza di Spagna. A lively wine bar/restaurant with freshly prepared appetizers at the bar, great pizza, and a terrific tiramisu.

10 a.m. After kicking off the day with some of Rome's finest and most famous coffee at Bar Sant'Eustachio (Piazza Sant'Eustachio 82) head up to the northernmost end of Via del Corso to Piazza del Popolo.

In the far right corner of the square stands the church of Santa Maria del Popolo where Langdon locates the body of the first missing Cardinal. Buried up to his waist at the bottom of a demon's hole beneath the church floor, he

As well as celebrating Langdon's first step in the Vatican mystery, take a moment to admire two Caravaggio masterpieces to the left of the main altar, The Crucifixion of St. Peter and The Conversion of St. Paul.

The view from the Pincio gardens up to the right of the Piazza has a lovely view across the Roman rooftops all the way to the Vatican and the very heart of the Angels & Demons intrigue.

With summer vacation quickly approaching, many soon-to-be travellers are weighing their holiday options. Check out this list of cool, quirky festivals taking place around the world this summer.

4. For something a little unusual, check out the Kirkpinar Oil Wrestling Festival (in late June). One of the oldest festivals in the world, this wrestling fest takes place in Edirne, Turkey and involves shirtless macho men grappling while slathered in oil.

5. The last Wednesday of August, at the peak of tomato season, the small Spanish town of Bunol (just outside of Valencia) hosts La Tomatina, a giant tomato food fight. The tomatoes are specially-grown for this annual event and a reported 140 tons are trucked in from the countryside. Just imagine thousands of tourists covered in salsa.

Virgin spreading its wings

Long-haul trips could be made in spaceships instead of planes in 20 years' time if Virgin's efforts to commercialize space travel succeed, the president of Virgin Galactic told Reuters in an interview.

Will Whitehorn said Virgin's plans to take tourists into space were just a first stage that could open up a range of possibilities for the company including space science, computer server farms in space and replacing long-haul flights.

Virgin Galactic, part of Richard Branson's Virgin Group, has collected $40 million in deposits from would-be space tourists including physicist Stephen Hawking and ex-racing driver Niki Lauda, and hopes to start commercial trips within two years.

Whitehorn said the bookings from 300 people willing to pay $200,000 each for a space flight had convinced Virgin the venture was viable. It is currently running test flights and hopes soon to win a licence from the Federal Aviation Authority.

Virgin claims that its technology, which releases a spaceship into sub-orbit in the air using a jet carrier aircraft, is more environmentally friendly than traditional ground-launched rocket technology.

Asked about the environmental impact, he points out that they could be completely solar-powered, and says that in any case the hostile vacuum in space makes it hard to do damage beyond leaving debris behind.

"Polluting space is extremely difficult," he said.

Eventually, he sees the possibility of transporting passengers to terrestrial destinations in spacecraft outside the atmosphere instead of by plane. He says a journey from Britain to Australia could be done in about 2-1/2 hours.

"That's a 20-year horizon," he said.

Virgin is not the only non-governmental party trying to develop space travel in the private sphere, but Whitehorn is confident it will be the first to take passengers into space.

Exhibit celebrates peaceful German revolution

COMMEMORATION A new outdoor exhibition documenting the peaceful revolution of 1989 that culminated in the fall of the Berlin Wall opened on the German capital's Alexanderplatz square last Thursday.

The exhibition, a main feature of Berlin's commemoration of the 20th anniversary of the symbolic end of the Cold War, focuses on the role played by civil rights activists in the former East Germany, or GDR. German Foreign Minister Frank-Walter Steinmeier opened the exhibition 20 years to the day after local elections that civil rights groups contested, marking what he said was Banners bearing the words of their chant, "Wir sind ein Volk" ("We are one people") are displayed above the exhibition.

Berlin Mayor Klaus Wowereit, who opened the exhibition with Steinmeier, welcomed the many GDR opposition leaders present.

"The exhibition we are opening today is not meant to be in a museum," he said. "The memories of autumn 1989 are too recent."

The exhibition will remain open around the clock until Nov. 14. Entrance is free.

with holes punctured through his chest and lungs.

For breathtaking views, take the lift or brave the long and narrow spiral stairways to the dome and roof of the Basilica.

Appreciate the scale and splendour of the church interior from the dizzy heights of its dome and then head out onto the sunny roof for an unusual, but pleasingly simple "caffé" experience courtesy of

Il Ristoro.

Sip a soft drink or coffee beneath giant marble saints and look out to the East for Castel Sant'Angelo, the final stop on Langdon's Illuminati trail.

A giant fortified structure, Castel Sant'Angelo was first begun by Emperor Hadrian in AD 135 as his mausoleum and has been used subsequently as an armoured stronghold, a prison and a papal residence, with a private walled passageway all the way to the Vatican.

6 p.m. For a sample of quaint and cobbled Rome, away from grandiose spaces and Papal splendours, take a walk along down the river to Trastevere.

Enjoy getting lost in its maze of narrow streets en route to a pre-dinner drink in Piazza di Santa Maria in Trastevere where the beautiful setting merits the somewhat elevated prices.

Sunday 10 a.m. Take a pricey but scenic breakfast in Piazza Navona, arguably Rome's most spectacular square. In the centre stands Bernini's Four Rivers Fountain, finished in 1651 and very recently restored.

Here Langdon discovers the body of the fourth and most elevated of the missing Cardinals, drowned to death in the fountain's waters.

12 p.m. Taking in the must-see Pantheon and the very pretty Piazza Sant'Ignazio, head east to the impressive Piazza di Pietra for a restorative lunch at Neopolitan restaurant La Caffettiera.

3 p.m. Heading east from the Corso and Piazza Barberini, make your way down Via XX Settembre to the Church of Santa Maria della Vittoria (open 3:30 to 6 p.m. Sunday).

In the presence of Bernini's Ecstasy of St. Teresa, a spectacular — if controversial — piece of dramatic Baroque sculpture, Langdon here finds an Illuminati abductor in the act of setting the third missing cardinal on fire.

During our trip we experienced both city and highway environments with the Sebring. With the larger of the two V6 engines under the hood, our tester had more than enough power for merging into traffic on high-speed freeways in and around Los Angeles.

In the city, the car feels heavy and a bit awkward. Its high rear end makes backing into parking spots a bit of a chore.

Hyundai plugs into Blue-Will

FIRST LOOK Hyundai unveiled its first plug-in HEV concept car at the recent Seoul motor show. Named Blue-Will, the futuristic car promises an electric-only driving distance of up to 64 km on a single charge and a fuel economy rating of up to 2.2 litres/100 km.

The car is powered by an all-aluminum 152 hp gasoline direct injected 1.6L engine, coupled to a Continuously Variable Transmission and a 100kw electric motor which is at the heart of the new Hyundai.

This parallel hybrid drive architecture serves as the foundation for future Hyundai hybrids, starting with the next-generation Sonata for North America. FROM CARGUIDE

This month is a big one for Anton Yelchin — maybe the biggest in his life. With roles in a pair of high-profile summer releases — Star Trek and Terminator Salvation — Yelchin's life has lately become a blur of flashy premieres around the world and press junkets at five-star hotels.

But he's trying to keep his wits about him. "These are all kind of the superficial elements of these kinds of features," he says, shrugging at the plush Beverly Hills hotel suite he's camped out in. "It's beyond the reason I do what I do."

Yelchin is already enjoying the top spot at the box office with Star Trek, in which he takes over the role of Russian navigator Pavel Chekov — not much of a stretch for the Leningrad-born Russian-American, who came to the U.S. as a toddler with his figure-skating parents after the fall of the Soviet Union.

For Yelchin, who is mostly known for smaller films like Charlie Bartlett and the TV series Huff, working on summer blockbusters is less a job than a chance to fulfill some childhood fantasies. "Suddenly felt like I was five again," he says. "I used to be on this set in my mind in my backyard. It was a weird kind of nostalgia."

But unlike the franchise reboot of Star Trek, his next big summer film has the daunting task of picking up where a less-than-stellar previous installment left off. "I went into this thinking this isn't going to be T3," he says, referring to Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines. "We're going to try and take this more seriously," Yelchin says.

And part of taking it more seriously meant the cast being more involved with the screenplay (by the same writers as T3). "I came to Albuquerque with a set of guidelines and a breakdown of (my character) Kyle Reese, and I wasn't going to change those guidelines to change the script," Yelchin explains. "Every scene needed to be adjusted."

It's no coincidence that Yelchin, just two months past his 20th birthday, has aspirations beyond acting. "I love filmmaking. I really am a movie geek. I'm obessed with them," he says. He's even working on a screenplay — "a movie about teenagers, but kind of a self-conscious look at teenagers."

And he shouldn't have much trouble moving behind the camera, since he practically grew up in film school. "It's the best free education you could get, just to work on a movie set and work with guys that know so much about what you're doing. You don't need to go to film school when you've had the opportunities that I have."

But with box office returns like he's been seeing, it might be a while before Yelchin gets a spare moment to get behind the camera.

In brief

TV Kevin Costner is returning to the Western genre with a new miniseries project at A&E. The Dances With Wolves actor-director is developing a four-hour movie for the cable network. The untitled project will tell a post-Civil War story concerning a major conflict in the settlement of the West.

CASTING British singer Joss Stone has signed to return to Showtime's The Tudors for its fourth and final season. She will reprise her role from the current third season, playing Anne of Cleves, fourth wife of Henry VIII (Jonathan Rhys Meyers).

TV The verdict is in: David E. Kelley's legal drama Legally Mad is not going forward at NBC. After opting to keep the pilot in contention for midseason, the network has decided to pass on the Warner Bros. TV-produced drama.

Kate lashes out at gossipers

DAMAGE CONTROL Kate Gosselin, mother of eight and star of the hit reality show Jon & Kate Plus 8, is fighting back at reports that she has been having a more-than-platonic relationship with Steve Neild, a bodyguard who frequently travels with her and her family, people.com reports.

Two weeks after stories linked her husband, Jon Gosselin, with a 23-year-old schoolteacher, Gosselin says she is now the target of tabloid lies.

"The next story coming out from the animals that stalk us is about our security person and his family," Kate tells People.

"Already the allegations they're making about me are disgusting, unthinkable, unfathomable, and I am horrified.

"These are people who absolutely love us and want to see us through to the end," Gosselin says of Neild and his family.

"Of course, both of them travel with us at times, and we've spent holidays together, because, in this situation, your circle grows smaller and smaller, and it's very natural to become friends with your manager, your publicist, your security team ... they're the only people you have left. And now they're coming under fire."

Jessica can't Remember That

POPS Jessica Simpson had another déjà vu moment, femalefirst.co.uk reports.

The website says the singer was left lost for words again onstage in California on Friday night when she forgot the lyrics to her song Remember That.

The pop star famously flubbed her Dolly Parton tribute song during a 2006 performance at the Kennedy Centre Honours in Washington, D.C. — and then forgot the words to the same song two other times this year.

She tried to play down the gaffe with humour, telling the California audience, "I always forget this," adding "I didn't write it." The singer then joked, "It just comes with the whole Jessica Simpson thing."

Sam to pay up for Britney's legal costs?

SALT IN WOUNDS Sam Lutfi faced off against singer Britney Spears' legal team and lost, slapped with a three-year restraining order last month — and his wallet may be taking a hit next, people.com reports.

Spears' lawyers asked a Los Angeles court last Friday to order Lutfi, who once was her manager, to pay $123,142 US to cover Spears' legal fees for the courtroom battle over the restraining order.

In addition, her lawyers are seeking $129,922 from Jon Eardley, an attorney who has challenged Jamie Spears' control over his daughter, and $72,292 from her ex-boyfriend Adnan Ghalib. Both Eardley and Ghalib were also ordered to stay away from the pop star.

Suit to block MJ comeback?

DOUBLE TIMING Concert promoters are battling to block Michael Jackson's concert series this summer — accusing the star of breaking an earlier agreement to make his comeback with them — femalefirst.co.uk alleges.

The superstar is preparing to take to the stage in London for his first gigs since 2001, but AllGood Entertainment is trying to block the shows, saying it entered an agreement with Jackson's manager, Frank Dileo, in 2008, promising the star would appear with his sister Janet and their brothers on tour.

As part of the deal, Jackson was allegedly prohibited from putting on any concerts for 18 months, but he allegedly violated the blackout when he signed up for the London series.

The website alleges the promoters have sent a cease and desist letter to Jackson's London concert organizers.

Metro Recipe of the Day

Italian Spirals with Burst Tomatoes

INGREDIENTS:

- 1 lb (450 g) thin Italian sausage (salsiccia)
- 2 tbsp (25 ml) olive oil
- 2 cloves garlic
- 1 tsp (5 ml) dried oregano
- 1/2 tsp (2 ml) dried chili flakes
- 1 1/2 lb (680 g) cherry tomatoes
- Salt and black pepper

GARNISH:

Fresh basil leaves

METHOD:

- Preheat broiler to high. Cut sausage into quarters and wind lengths into coils. Pass thin metal skewer horizontally through each coil, then arrange all four on rack of grill pan.
- Heat oil in large frying pan. Peel garlic and crush into oil. Then add oregano and chili flakes and fry gently 30 seconds, without allowing crushed garlic to change colour.
- Spread tomatoes on top of garlic and chili, cover

- and cook over low heat 10–12 minutes, or until most tomatoes have burst and are half-submerged in juices.
- Broil sausage coils 5–6 minutes per side, turning about to ensure even browning.
- Uncover tomatoes, raise heat to moderate and cook 5 minutes, or until juices have thickened. Press lightly with back of spoon to ensure that all tomatoes have burst.
- Season tomato sauce to taste with salt and pepper, then pour onto four warmed serving plates and put sausage coils in centres. Rinse and dry basil leaves, strip from stems, and scatter over top.
